Dr. J. H. Lucas has returned to Brunswick after a hunting trip in Minnesota and Canada. He found the ground a little dry for successful hunting but the party managed to kill several deer, a moose and some smaller animals.

Ed Keeting returned November 27 from Kansas City. He reports times slow there with little doing in the mechanical trades.

NERVOUS MEN WOMEN

are actually weak, run-down—they are slowly deteriorating—they need strength and nourishment for body and brain.

Scott's Emulsion corrects nervousness—it is essentially a food—a concentrated, nourishing, curative food to restore the healthy action of body cells, fortify the blood, sharpen the appetite, make strength, health, energy and vigor.

As pure as milk, it is readily assimilated—nourishes every organ and every tissue. Physicians everywhere recommend Scott's Emulsion with absolute confidence in its beneficial results. Don't wait—start now, but insist on SCOTT'S.

No alcohol or drugs.

WOMEN'S SCORN

And just here is where the mistake occurred. The buzz rose loudly and more definitely, coupled now with the name of the dancer, and Mrs. Eppingwell heard. She, too, thought of Flossie lifting her moose-eared feet through the endless hours, and Floyd Vanderlip was invited up the hillside to tea, and invited often. This quite took his breath away, and he became drunken with appreciation of himself. Never was man so maltreated. His soul had become a thing for which three women struggled, while a fourth was on the way to claim it. And three such women!

But Mrs. Eppingwell and the mistake she made. She spoke of the affair, tentatively, to Sitka Charley, who had sold dogs to the Greek girl. But no names were mentioned. The nearest approach to it was when Mrs. Eppingwell said, "This—er—horrid woman," and Sitka Charley, with the model woman strong in his thoughts, had echoed, "This—er—horrid woman." And he agreed with her, that it was a wicked thing for a woman to come between a man and the girl he was to marry. "A mere girl, Charley," she said, "I am sure she is. And is coming into a strange country without a friend when she gets here. We must do something." Sitka Charley promised his help, and went away thinking what a wicked woman this Lorraine Lisznay must be also what noble woman Mrs. Eppingwell and Freda were to interest themselves in the welfare of the unknown Flossie.

Now Mrs. Eppingwell was open as the day. To Sitka Charley, who took her once past the Hills of Silence, belongs the glory of having memorialized her clear-searching eyes, her clear-ringing voice, and her utter downright frankness. Her lips had a way of stiffening to command, and she was used to coming straight to the point. Having taken Floyd Vanderlip's measurement, she did not dare this with him; but she was not afraid to go down into the town to Freda. And down she went, in the bright light of day, to the house of the dancer. She was above silly tongues, as was her husband, the captain. She wished to see this woman and to speak with her, not was she aware of any reason why she should not. So she stood in the snow at the Greek girl's door, with the frost at 60 below, and parleyed with the waiting-maid for a full five minutes. She had also the pleasure of being turned away from that door, and of going back up the hill, with heart for the indignity which had been put upon her.

"Who was this woman that she should refuse to see her?" she asked herself. One would think it the other way around, and she herself but a dancing girl denied at the door of the wife of a captain. As it was, she knew, had Freda come up the hill to her—no matter what the errand—she would have made her welcome at her fire, and they would have sat there as two women, and talked, merely as two women. She had overstepped convention and lowered herself, but she did think it different with the women down in the town. And she was ashamed that she had lain herself open to such dishonor, and her thoughts of Freda were unkind.

Not that Freda deserved this. Mrs. Eppingwell well had descended to meet her who was without caste, she, strong in traditions of her own earlier status, had not permitted it. She could worship such a woman, and she would have asked no greater joy than to have had her into the cabin and sat with her, just sat with her, for an hour. But her respect for Mrs. Eppingwell, and her respect for herself, who was beyond respect, had prevented her doing that which she most desired.

Though not quite recovered from the recent visit of Mrs. McFee, the wife of the minister, who had descended upon her in a whirlwind of exhortation and brimstone, she could not imagine what had prompted the present visit. She was not aware of any particular wrong she had done, and surely this woman who waited at the door was not concerned with the welfare of her soul. Why had she come? For all the curiosity she could not help but feel, she steeled herself in the pride of those who are without pride, and trembled in the inner room like a maid on the first caress of a lover. If Mrs. Eppingwell suffered going up the hill, she too suffered, lying face downward on the bed, dry-eyed, dry-mouthed, dumb.

Mrs. Eppingwell's knowledge of human nature was great. She aimed at universality. She had found it easy to step from the civilized and contemplate things from the barbaric aspect. She could comprehend certain primal and analogous characteristics in a hungry wolf-dog or a starving man, and predicate lines of action to be pursued by either under like conditions. To her, a woman was a woman, whether garbed in purple or the rags of the gutter; Freda was a woman. She would not have been surprised had she been taken into the dancer's cabin and encountered on common ground; nor surprised had she been taken in and flaunted in prideless arrogance. But to be treated as she had been treated, was unexpected and disappointing. Ergo, she had not caught Freda's point of view. And this was good. There are some points of view which cannot be gained save through much travail and personal crucifixion, and it were well for the world that its Mrs. Eppingwell's should, in certain ways, fall short of universality. One cannot understand de-filement without laying hands to pitch, which is very sticky, while there be plenty willing to undertake the experiment. All of which is of small concern, beyond the fact that it gave Mrs. Eppingwell ground for grievance, and bred for her a greater love in the Greek girl's heart.

And in this way things went along for a month—Mrs. Eppingwell striving to withhold the man from the Greek dancer's blandishments against the time of Flossie's coming; Flossie lessening the miles each day on the dreary trail; Freda pitting her strength against the model woman; the model woman straining every nerve to land the prize; and the man moving through it all like a flying shuttle, very proud of himself, whom he believed to be a second Don Juan.

It was nobody's fault except the man's that Lorraine Lisznay at least landed him. The way of a man with a maid may be too wonderful to know, but the way of woman with a man passeth all conception; whence the prophet were indeed unwise who could dare forecast Floyd Vanderlip's course 24 hours in advance.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Brewer entertained a few guests last week and the first part of the present week. Mrs. R. W. Cooper of Glasgow, sister of Mr. Brewer, returned home Monday, after spending several days here. They also entertained two sons of J. J. Renahan of near Dalton, last Friday.

May Lose Mill

Summer residents are afraid they may lose the Sumner Flouring Mills, through the death of John Stoner, part owner. The mill will not be operated, according to the Sumner Star, until Mr. Stoner's share is sold to some one who will continue its operation, as the other partner, Mr. Godding has not sufficient capital to float the enterprise.

A Des Moines man had an attack of muscular rheumatism in his shoulder. A friend advised him to go to Hot Springs that meant an expense of $150.00 or more. He sought for a cheaper and quicker way to cure it and found it in Chamberlain's Liniment. Three days after the first application he was well. For sale by all dealers.

Engagement Announced

At a recent meeting of the Embroidery Club at the home of Mrs. Harry E. Tatum, in Brunswick announcement was made of the engagement of Miss Jean Knappenberg to Mr. J. Hunt of Kansas City. The wedding takes place December 8.

Gets $125 for Horse

For the third time a court has decided that M. W. Wilhite of Huntville is entitled to damages against the city for the value of his horse which was killed by a live wire in the city streets. The first trial in justice court gave the plaintiff damages to the extent of $100. Appeal by the city to circuit court brought a verdict for $125 and this affirmed by the Court of Appeals at Kansas City.
